Frequently Asked Questions on Replacement Entry Doors

Do My Doors Qualify for a Tax Credit?

Having new energy-efficient doors or windows installed in your home may qualify you for a significant tax credit. A homeowner can claim the Residential Energy Credit up to 10% of the energy-efficient home-improvement product cost. Installation costs might be excluded up to $200 for windows and $500 for doors.

These are the criteria for eligibility to receive the tax credit:

- The home improvement products you purchase must satisfy the EPA's ENERGY STAR® standards.
- The window and door installations must be at your primary residence.
- The installations must have been done between January 1 and December 31 of the tax year for which you are submitting the return claiming the tax credit.

If you have claimed an energy efficiency tax credit in the past, consult with a tax professional before claiming this credit, to ensure you do not exceed the collective limit. Or, go to the IRS taxpayer information website to learn more about your potential remaining allowance for this tax credit.
