What Exactly are Double Hung Windows?

Single and double hung windows are gaining fast popularity in many home designs due to their elegance and style. Most of the time, these two are confused as they tend to look identical from a distance. As opposed to a single-hung window where only the bottom sash moves with the upper half being permanently fixed, both sashes slide either up, down or even tilt in for double hung windows.

We offer a variety of window frame materials for double hung windows, such as:

Double Hung Windows Features

The Energy Shield 8000 Series double hung window is also a traditional style that opens from the top by lowering the top sash and opens from the bottom by raising the bottom sash. This style includes a full screen covering both the top and bottom sashes. The full screen is often used when privacy or sunscreens are going to be applied.

- Both sashes tilt in for easy cleaning.
- Premium dust seals on top and bottom sashes
- Allows ventilation from top and bottom
- Perfect for second story windows

Our double hung windows come preinstalled with a latch that secures the top and bottom sashes together to reinforce your home's security. Once the latch is unlocked, the sashes can move either up, down or tilt inwards. Grill patterns of our double hung windows, Arizona are artfully designed to suit any style. We can, however, customize them depending on our client's preference. We have limitless colors and glass designs from which you can choose. We employ the use of fin and compression seals for weather stripping to eliminate the entrance of debris allergens like dust and outdoor noise.
